

Dreaming of independence

Jeff Kahn (Rutgers University)

We'll discuss a few examples of a common state of affairs: it would be nice to be able to say that some quantities of interest behave (more or less) as if they were independent. And occasionally we can (more or less). An old conjecture of Alon and Spencer is among the casualties. But more often we can't (but maybe you can).